Greater Oregon - Ger. 7, 1939

Many Irrigation Projects Run Cost up To $200 Per Acre; Must Study Needs for Dam

Albany, Oregon
William L. Finley, vice president of the National Wild Life Federation warned members of the Albany Chamber of Commerce Wednesday noon that the seven dams planned for the Willamette river and tributaries may destroy much of our wealth.

He said the basis of wealth are the food resources of land and water. Those like coal, oil and minerals under the soil cannot be replenished when they are gone but those on the top of the ground are renewable. They were made for man's use, not misuse. We must replant in order to have proper crops.

Every year 300,000 acres of land, 1875 farms of 160 acres each go out of production because of misuse. We must not only conserve our forests but our water supply, Finley said.

Draining of swamps and lakes to make more farm land lowers the water table and results in abandoned farms.

The speaker urged careful study of the need for dams before they are built on the Willamette and Santiam rivers. Our rivers supply us with a great source of food and help bring $40,000,000 to Oregon from tourists each year.

The practice of making open sewers of our streams was condemned.

Finley said cost of irrigation in some districts totals $200 per acre and can never be made to pay.

In closing he stated that Oregon is going to develop rapidly regardless of any efforts we make to speed it up.

Merwin Wilkinson introduced the speaker.

Fred Duncan, chairman of the membership committee introduced several of the 30 new members who joined the Chamber of Commerce last week.
